

§ 904(a)(1)

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power⁹⁵⁵ of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, or of that House to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

§ 904(a)(2)

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to such House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.⁹⁵⁶

⁹⁵⁵ The Constitution provides: "Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings . . ." U.S. CONST. art. I, § 5, cl. 2. The provisions of section 904(a) are thus a specific statement of a more general proposition. In his Senate Procedure, the Parliamentary Emeritus explains:

Regardless of laws passed and signed by the President involving the rulemaking power of the House and Senate, as stipulated in each Act, the two Houses of Congress in their rulemaking power, under the Constitution, may ignore provisions of such laws of positive action by a majority vote of either or both Houses, as the case might be, as long as it is within the scope of the granted rulemaking power of the two bodies. This is the case with the Budget Act embodying provisions of rulemaking powers of the two bodies.

⁹⁵⁶ Either the Senate or the House may thus adopt a simple resolution that would waive or suspend any section of the Congressional Budget Act insofar as that section governs only the House adopting the resolution. See supra note 308.

The conference report on the Budget Act expounded:

SECTION 904. RULEMAKING POWERS

The House and Senate versions provided that the rules established for the congressional budget process and certain other provisions are an exercise of the rulemaking powers of the House and Senate and may be changed by either as it desires. . . .

The conference substitute retains, with conforming changes, the
